

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

THOS
Relig

9231

Harvard University

Library of the Divinity School

---

Bought with money

GIVEN BY

THE SOCIETY

FOR PROMOTING

THEOLOGICAL EDUCATION

---

Received 23 Feb. 1906.

AN INTRO-DUCTION TO CHRISTIAN
MYSTICISM

By ALEXANDER WHYTE, D.D.

LANCELOT ANDREWS AND HIS PRIVATE DEVOTIONS. A Biography, a Transcript, and an Interpretation. Antique paper, Art Linen Binding, price 3s. 6d.

JACOB BEHMEN: An Appreciation. Pigskin Binding, price 2s. 6d. ; Art Linen Binding, price 2s. ; Paper cover, price 1s. 3d.

FATHER JOHN OF THE GREEK CHURCH ;
An Appreciation, with some Characteristic Passages of his Mystic and Spiritual Autobiography. Art Linen Binding, price 2s.

SANTA TERESA: An Appreciation, with some of the best passages of the Saint's Writings, selected, adapted, and arranged. Art Linen Binding, price 2s.

SIR THOMAS BROWNE: An Appreciation, with some of the best passages of the Physician's Writings. Art Linen Binding, price 2s.

By CHARLOTTE ADA RAINY.

THOUGHTS ON THE SPIRITUAL LIFE BY JACOB BEHMEN. Translated from the German by Charlotte Ada Rainy, with Preface by Alexander Whyte, D.D. Art Linen Binding, price 2s.

---

PUBLISHED BY
OLIPHANT, ANDERSON AND FERRIER,
EDINBURGH AND LONDON.

AN INTRODUCTION TO
CHRISTIAN
MYSTICISM

By ELEANOR
C. GREGORY
WITH PREFATORY LETTER BY . . .
DR. ALEXANDER
WHYTE Edinburgh

1901
LONDON
H. R. ALLENSON
2 IVY LANE E.C

913 834
Kivinty School

PREFATORY LETTER BY DR. ALEXANDER WHYTE

7 CHARLOTTE SQUARE EDINBURGH

Thank you for letting me see this excellent paper. I rejoice in the publication of anything that helps to turn the public mind to the study of the great spiritual writers; and this lecture will form an admirable introduction to that greatest and best of all studies.

With best wishes

ALEXANDER WHYTE

PREFACE

This short paper was prepared for reading before the Portsmouth Ladies' Society. The limit of time therefore must be pleaded as an additional excuse for the imperfection of the treatment.

ELEANOR C. GREGORY.

DEANERY, ST. PAUL'S, JULY, 1901.

CONTENTS

I. INTRODUCTORY

II. THE MYSTICS

	PAGE
(a) GROUPING . . . .	18
(b) HISTORICAL . . . .	21
PLATO . . . .	22
PHILO . . . .	23
ORIGEN . . . .	25
PLOTINUS . . . .	28
EPICTETUS . . . .	30
DIONYSIUS . . . .	33
ERIGENA . . . .	42
VICTORINES, ETC . . . .	43
ECKHART . . . .	43
PARACELSUS . . . .	48
JACOB BÖHME . . . .	50
LAW AND ENGLISH MYSTICS .	52
TAULER . . . .	53
THEOLOGIA GERMANICA .	64
THOMAS À KEMPIS . . .	67

Contents

	PAGE
RUYSBROEK . . . . .	68
SUBO . . . . .	68
ST. JOHN OF THE CROSS, ST.
THERESA . . . . .	70
MOLINOS . . . . .	70
MME. GUYON, FÉNÉLON . . . . .	71
MODERN MYSTICISM . . . . .	72
MAETERLINCK . . . . .	75

III. SUMMARY

(a) FEATURES . . . . .	76
(1) SELF-SURRENDER . . . . .	77
(2) CHRIST'S LIFE IN US . . . . .	78
(3) THE THREE STAGES . . . . .	79
(4) SYMBOLISM . . . . .	80
(5) REALITY OF THE IDEAL . . . . .	81
(6) VISIONS . . . . .	82
(b) TENDENCIES TO ERROR . . . . .	83
(1 and 2) SEE PAGES 34 AND 36.
(3) DISPARAGEMENT OF FORMS . . . . .	84
(4) UNDUE EXALTATION . . . . .	86
(5) INDIVIDUALISM : AND ITS
TWO SAFEGUARDS . . . . .	87
I. PRAYER AND THOUGHT . . . . .	88
II. PURIFICATION FOR SER-
VICE . . . . .	92

I

Introductory

SINCE no two people are agreed upon what Mysticism is and what it is not, the task of any one who undertakes to talk about it is both peculiarly easy and peculiarly difficult. Easy, because it is the simplest thing in the world for a person cheerfully and superficially to define what he thinks Mysticism means ; and difficult if he desires to dive rather more deeply into what it has meant to other people.

Christian Mysticism

We will make no attempt, here and now, to trace or follow out any system of mystical philosophy ; but, with the object of giving some sort of guide for possible study, merely collect together a few thoughts (mostly of other people's) upon men and things connected with Mysticism.

It is generally agreed that Mysticism is viewed with dislike, and certainly with distrust. It suffers also from some of its best friends being wont to reckon all its extravagances and eccentricities as its essentials—an inverted way of looking at it one would think, but perhaps natural enough to those whose eyes are very widely opened to its dangers. To condemn it because it is liable to great abuse is hardly more reasonable than to condemn the use of light and fire because they will blind and burn. A rather suggestive though incomplete parallel may be found in Nihilism. Nihilism, so far as can be gathered from such information as is available, is a nickname bestowed indiscriminately upon all who seek social reform in Russia by whatever means. By social reform I mean such elementary forms of justice as trial before sentence, punishment proportioned to the offence, the liberty of the Press, and so on.

Introductory

Christian Mysticism

The Terrorists who imagine that peace on earth can be hurried up by dynamite and devastation are alone Nihilists ; but they and the peaceful “district visiting” kind of reformer have got inextricably muddled up in people’s minds, and are involved in a common and sulphurous condemnation. So Mysticism suffers from its connexion with several thoroughly and traditionally mistrusted bugbears—with Mystery for example, which many English minds take to mean something that is certainly dangerous and probably wicked ; with visions and trances, which the same persons will tell you are obvious nonsense, and connected only with the digestion ; with monkishness, seclusion from the world, and wild ideas generally. That Mysticism is connected with Mystery no one can wish to deny when they hear the significant and far reaching meaning given to Mystery by St. Chrysostom : " A mystery," he says, " is that which is everywhere proclaimed, but which is not understood by those who have not right judgement." Out of the twenty-six definitions of Mysticism given by Mr. Inge at the end of his Bampton Lectures, here are a few of the least obscure : " The complete union of the soul with God is the goal of all Mysticism " (Canon Overton).

Introductory

Christian Mysticism

"Mysticism is the immediate feeling of the unity of the self with God ; it is nothing therefore but the fundamental feeling of religion—the religious life at its very heart and centre " (Pfleiderer). "Mysticism appears in connexion with the endeavour of the human mind to grasp the Divine essence of the ultimate reality of things, and to enjoy the blessedness of actual communion with the Highest. The first is the philosophic side of Mysticism ; the second its religious side " (Prof. Seth). R. A. Vaughan defines it thus : " Mysticism is that form of error which mistakes for a Divine manifestation the operations of a merely human faculty." This miserable phrase, which is of the kind used by the class of men who always like to say "It merely thunders" when the voice of God is speaking, is the only definition to be found in that unsatisfactory but indispensable book, Hours with the Mystics. As a collection of the opinions and sayings of the chief Mystics it is most valuable (partly because, until Mr. Inge's book appeared, it was unique); but the form in which the book is cast, and the manner in which the subject is approached are both extremely repellent.

Introductory

Mr. Inge's definition is : "The attempt to realize, in thought

Christian Mysticism

and feeling, the immanence" (or in and through-dwelling) "of the temporal in the eternal, and the eternal in the temporal." The late Bishop of London defined it as "the attempt to live upon a non-experimental plane." The next and last is the one which can be adopted for the purposes of this paper : "Mysticism is the science of a hidden life." To obtain union, or at least communion, with the Highest is thus, as may be seen, the endeavour of all Mysticism ; and the way to this has generally been divided into three stages : the first, of Purification ; the second, of Illumination ; the third, of Union. This last stage, which is for the

Introductory

Mystic the kernel of the whole, presupposes strenuous cleansing of heart and mind, and is not attained without toilsome effort ; but when attained is the highest of all possible conditions, being the uniting of the soul with God.

II

The Mystics

(a) GROUPING

BOTH R. A. Vaughan and Mr. Inge have divided the Mystics themselves into groups, according to their tendencies; and theirs are very interesting systems of classification, though liable to the same difficulty that besets all such systems—namely, the distressing propensity that things of beauty and merit have for getting out of line, and mixing up their labels, with no regard for the patient classifier.

Classification

Vaughan makes three classes, which he calls the theopathic, the theosophic, and the theurgic ; or, to put them into rather more comprehensible language, the saint, the sage, and the spiritualist. By the spiritualist I ask you to have in mind not that degraded term which is commonly connected with spirit rappings and floatings in the air (though these performances can boast an antiquity of at least 1,700 or 1,800 years), but a much nobler character, who traces manifestations and influences of the spirit through every form of life, organic or inorganic.

Christian Mysticism

This is a freer translation and a wider meaning than Vaughan intended, but the word will cover the extension.

The sage and the saint, the philosopher and the religiously minded man, need no explanation. The sage has throughout his history suffered from two opposite tendencies, to which, oddly enough, he appears to be equally prone—namely, the effort to become greatly less, or greatly more than the “reasonable man” seems intended to be. The saint is sometimes frightened of the spiritualist and impatient of the sage, and sometimes gives away his inheritance by disclaiming all connexion with either, confining the beautiful term of Mystic to one or other of them, to the exclusion of himself.

Classification

Mr. Inge's grouping practically follows the same lines, though he names his groups rather differently—the Speculative Mystic answering to the sage, the Practical or Devotional Mystic to the saint, and the Nature Mystic (whom he places last and highest) to the spiritualist, as I have just described him.

(b) HISTORICAL

Though we will reverse the position of these last, we will also begin by considering the Mystics of the speculative order; and, leaving aside for to-day the

Christian Mysticism

Mystics of India and the East, we fasten on the great Plato name of Plato, who is, it is widely conceded, the father of European Mysticism. The name of Plato appears and reappears, in cycles or waves of human thought, all down the centuries. Some of these are directly connected with Mysticism. First of all there are the Neo-platonists of Alexandria, coming about five hundred years after Plato and Socrates ;
then the Renaissance revived Neo-platonism at a distance of more than a thousand years ; and a little later on, in England, in the middle of the seventeenth century, arose the group of men

Philo

known as the Cambridge Platonists. A connected history of these revivals, comparing and contrasting them, should be, one would think, of the greatest interest. Of the three, the first and the last produced avowed Mystics.

In the first century,
Philo in Alexandria, lived Philo, the Jewish philosopher, who, by his endeavour to reconcile the Old Testament with Greek, and especially Platonic philosophy, led the way to the Neo-platonist revival. It would take too long, even for a competent person, to give any kind of sketch of what he or any other of the philosophers taught

Christian Mysticism

as a system, as I have said before. But as we come up to these great figures of history, the utmost we can do within the limits of this paper is to try to associate with their names some one or two of their thoughts, which have become embedded in, or have some bearing upon Mysticism. Philo taught that "the kingdom of God is within us, even in this life ; for this life's reward is holiness, the vision of God ; its punishment, that of being what sinners are. This vision or knowledge of the Most High is the direct personal communion of a soul that no longer reasons, but feels and knows. It was reached by Abraham through learning ; by ' the wrestler ' Jacob, through moral effort ; by Isaac, ' the laughter of the soul,' through the natural development of a sweet and gracious spirit " (Dr. Bigg). To every soul its own road. Hard upon Philo followed Clement of Origen Alexandria and Origen, to whom is mainly owing the Christian mystical thought of the second century. Clement, in order to meet the disconcerting fact that all Christians did not attain the highest spiritual level, advances the theory (not original to him) of the Two Lives. Dr. Bigg says, in his Christian Platonists of Alexandria, from which these remarks on Clement and Origen are taken : "Clement proclaims that the life of the ordinary believer, that is to say, of the great body of the Church, is a lower life. Its marks are faith, fear, and hope. . . . It is the sphere of discipline, of repression, of painful effort. Its crown is . . . the negative virtue of self-control. Above it stands the higher life, which should follow naturally on the lower life, and after which all men and all women are bound to strive—the life of righteousness and knowledge and love," the "disinterested love" which figures so largely in the controversies which raged later round Molinos and Mme. Guyon.

Origen

Christian Mysticism

Origen

Clement, while talking of Apathy, or rather Detachment, as the highest state of the believer, does not divest it of practical virtues. He says that "contemplation is the perfected believer's chief delight ; the next is active beneficence ; the third is instruction, the work of making others like himself. God gives him an exceeding great reward, the salvation of other men." Both Clement and Origen accepted Allegorism—the finding of hidden meanings in the Holy Scriptures—as part of the teaching of the Church. They, and many of the Early Fathers, wove tissues of the most surprisingly beautiful insight, coupled with conjecture, around the letter of the Law and the Prophets, and also of the New Testament. St. Thomas Aquinas, in the thirteenth century, collected sayings from these sources upon every verse in the four Gospels, a work known as the Catena Aurea, the greatest monument of Allegorism.

Christian Mysticism

We pass on to two exalted thinkers, Plotinus and Epictetus, who, together with Marcus Aurelius, are, I suppose, the loftiest and most famous teachers among those who might have been Christians, and were not.

Plotinus Plotinus lived at the same time as Origen, and founded a school of disciples

Plotinus

who, after the manner of disciples, went on to develop the lower instead of the higher parts of his philosophy after his death. He has influenced, and still influences men of very different types of mind, and under very different circumstances, from St. Augustine to Maeterlinck. Plotinus divides the soul of man into two : "to the lower belong the animal life, pleasure and pain, desire, anger, sense ; the higher comes to him straight from God and is like God, and differs from the Divine only in this, that while connected with the body it possesses memory, imagination . . . and a finite will " (Dr. Bigg). Plotinus argued definitely in favour of the immortality of the soul, founding this belief upon "the soul's capacity for virtue." For him as for Philo, and later Mystics, the culmination of the life of the spirit was Vision, Ecstasy, "which comes to the purified soul suddenly, without warning, and is the immediate consciousness of the Divine" (Dr. Bigg).

Christian Mysticism

Epictetus      It may be a great liberty to introduce Epictetus among the Mystics, for in no book on Mysticism can I find any mention of his name. But, although a Stoic philosopher, he fills his discourses with expressions almost identical with the language of Devotional Mysticism. Such are the following :

Epictetus

“ We must lose our own if we want what is not our own,” and “ I have ranged my pursuits under the direction of GOD. Is it His will that I should have a fever ? It is my will too. . . . Is it His will that I should desire anything ? It is my will too. Is it His will that I should obtain it ? It is mine too. Is it not His will ? It is not mine. . . . A person who reasons thus understands and considers that if he joins himself to GOD he shall go safely through his journey.— How do you mean, join himself ? —That whatever is the will of GOD may be his will too ; whatever is not the will of GOD may not be his." Again : " What is the will of God that I should do now ? What is not His will ? A little while ago it was His will that you should be at leisure, should talk with yourself, should read, hear, prepare yourself. You have had sufficient time for this. At present He says to you : ' Come now to the combat. Show us what you have learned, how you have wrestled, ' " and he concludes the Enchiridion in the words of Cleanthes, the Greek poet :

Christian Mysticism

Conduct me, Jove, and thou, O Destiny, Wherever your decrees have fixed my station.

I follow cheerfully ; and did I not,
Wicked or wretched I must follow still.

Of this, Thomas à Kempis

Dionysius

sounds like a Christian echo, when he says : " If thou carry the Cross cheerfully, it will carry thee ; . . . if thou carry it unwillingly, thou makest for thyself a burden and yet thou must bear."

Dionysius. The mysterious character known as Dionysius the Areopagite has exercised a vast and very mixed influence upon the history of Christian Mysticism. The mediaeval mystics were, as Mr. Inge says, "steeped in him." It is thought that he was a Syrian monk, and that "he perpetrated a deliberate, and, as he would think—pious fraud in fathering his books on St. Paul's great

Christian Mysticism

Athenian convert." The two greatest errors with which Mysticism is charged, claim him on their side:—I mean Pantheism; and Nothingness, "das Nichts," the Divine Dark. Of this Dionysius writes: "The mystic must leave behind all things, both in the sensible and the intelligible worlds, till he enters into the darkness or knowing nothing that is truly mystical. . . . Our highest knowledge of God consists in mystic ignorance." This doctrine is closely connected with all Oriental Mysticism, and the Buddhist Nirvana. This seems to be the proper place for enlarging a little upon the remark that has been made concerning the endeavour of the mystic philosopher — the sage — to become either more or less than he is intended to be. To enter into the Divine Dark cannot but be —however it is defended or explained away—the abandoning of the higher functions of the soul, thinking thereby to liberate the spirit ; and as such, must mean arrested development on the part of some God-given faculty, the proper end for which is harmonious education with the whole, rather than suppression. But there are not many who desire to enter upon this forbidding and isolated path. A far more living and acceptable error is Pantheism, which may be roughly and loosely expressed in the following syllogism : God is everything and everything is God : I am a thing : therefore I am God. Here the danger of endeavouring to become too much, rather than too little, is very patent. The following extracts from Mr. Inge's book will serve as a further explanation. "Pantheism . . . (is) the doctrine that the universe is the complete and only expression of God, Who on this theory is only immanent, and not transcendent. On this view, everything in the world belongs to the Being of God, Who is manifested equally in everything.

Nothingness

Christian Mysticism

Pantheism

(As Indian sages say) : ‘ The learned behold GOD alike in the reverend Brahmin, in the ox, and in the elephant, in the dog, and in him who eateth the flesh of dogs.’ . . . This (theory) is inconsistent with any belief in purpose, either in the whole or in the parts. Evil therefore cannot exist for the sake of a higher good : it must be itself good. It is easy to see how this view of the world may pass into pessimism or nihilism ; for if everything is real and equally Divine, it makes no difference . . . whether we call anything good or bad. . . . Pantheistic also is any theory according to which God comes to Himself, attains full self-consciousness in the highest of His creatures. . . . This . . . involves the belief that time is an ultimate reality. If, in the cosmic process which takes place in time, God becomes something which He was not before, it cannot be said that He is exalted above time, or that a thousand years are to Him as one day." In modern times, Emerson is perhaps the most conspicuous Pantheistic philosopher; his position as a thinker is thus described by Mr. Inge: "Emerson . . . whose beautiful character was as noble a gift to humanity as his writing . . . yet shut his eyes to pain, death and sin even more resolutely than did Goethe.

Christian Mysticism

Pantheism

The optimism which is built on this foundation has no message of comfort for the stricken heart. . . . He cannot be acquitted of playing with Pantheistic Mysticism of the Oriental type, without seeing or without caring whither such speculations logically lead. . . . 'I, the imperfect, adore my own Perfect. . . . I am part of GOD,' and so on. This is not the language of those who have travelled up the mystical ladder instead of only writing about it. Even for those fourteenth century mystics who write most arrogantly, some think even blasphemously, about deification, 'the passage into the Divine glory is the final reward,

Christian Mysticism

only to be attained by all manner of exercises'; while for Emerson it seems to be a state already existing which we can realize by a mere act of intellectual apprehension. And the phrase 'man is a part of God'—as if the Divine Spirit were divided among the organs which express its various activities, has been condemned by all the great speculative mystics from Plotinus downwards." That Pantheistic views are extinct, I think few will be found to assert: and the Emersonian type commends itself greatly to a generation that is perhaps increasing in the clear apprehension of a beautiful goal to mankind's pilgrimage; but which chafes

Pantheism

with a sore impatience at the indispensable,—the essential preliminary of the journey. The same temper leads it often to seize on catchwords and high phrases, careless of their consequences or their history ; without mental leisure to be at the pains to trace them through previous developments, in which as often as they have appeared, they have been explained, qualified, or refuted. To many intelligences theology is an ill-sounding name, nor will they accept the fact that one entire aspect of it is merely a divine philosophy. When, therefore, Pantheism is indiscriminately charged against all mysticism, we may reply that the doctrine of the indwelling or immanence of God, which is the heritage of every mystic, may be, and has been, from Dionysius to the present day,—pushed to this extreme; but it does not logically follow from a full and clear statement of the mystical position. “The theories of Dionysius,” says Mr. Inge, “were worked up into a consistent philosophical system”

Christian Mysticism

Erigena. by John Scotus Erigena, an English or Irish monk who lived in the ninth century. The Pantheistic form of Mysticism was further continued by a group of theologians in France, where the Church was confronted with the problem of “how to encourage the warm love and faith of the Mystics, without giving rein to their mischievous errors. The twelfth and thirteenth centuries produced several famous writers who attempted to solve this problem by combining Scholasticism and Mysticism. The leaders in this attempt were St. Bernard, Hugo and Richard of

Victorines, etc

St. Victor (the celebrated school in the outskirts of Paris), Victorines
etc.

Bonaventura, and others. . . . They insist often on self-knowledge as the way to the knowledge of God, and on self-purification as more important than philosophy."

Eckhart. The man whom Mr. Inge calls "the greatest of all speculative Mystics," Meister Eckhart, a Dominican monk, prior of Erfurt and afterwards vicar-general for Bohemia, was born about the middle of the thirteenth century. At this time religious opinion in Europe was divided, roughly speaking, into two opposing camps: the one, religious in name only, occupying the highest and most lucrative offices of the Church; the other, composed largely of the poor and obscure, who sought, by banding themselves together, to support each other in leading and bringing others to lead a spiritual life. These confraternities and sects were of various degrees of worth,

Christian Mysticism

Eckhart

some of great purity and holiness, as the Friends of God ("die Gottesfreunde"), and others, starting with high aims, but sinking through the fanaticism and unbalanced zeal of their followers into degeneracy and licence. Of these, the Beghards, or Brethren of the Free Spirit, were the boldest and best known. They held "that the spirit is bound by no law, and annihilated the difference between the Creator and the creature." Eckhart, without doubt, laid himself open to the charge of countenancing these theories; and though they did not lead him to depart from austerity of life, they afforded a shelter and a sanction to others who were less high principled or less fastidious.

Christian Mysticism

In Eckhart's writings we frequently meet with the expressions, so common among the mediaeval Mystics (and answering to the "higher soul" of Plotinus), the "ground of the soul," or the "Divine spark at the apex of the soul," which is so closely akin to God that it is one with Him.

After Eckhart, and both owning themselves indebted to him, spring two branches of mystical thought in Germany. The names most intimately connected with his—Tauler, Suso and Ruysbroek—belong to the school of Devotional Mystics, whom we will consider lastly, though it is indeed a graceless task to differentiate between, and classify these great followers of God, "who were the chosen vessels of His grace, and the lights of the world in their several generations."

Eckhart

That they were at one in the object of their apprehension might well make them resent our clumsy labelling of their methods of apprehension. Böhme was at least as devotional and practical a Mystic as Tauler ; and on the other hand, no one can assert that Tauler's walk with God was not as close as Böhme's, for all that the symbolism or nature did not speak so loudly to him ; nor that Fénelon was not as lofty a character as Kingsley. We will guard ourselves then against habitually regarding the Mystics as specimens, and return for the moment to those whom, for convenience, we put in the second class, and whom Mr. Inge calls Nature Mystics. "The doctrine of Divine immanence"—Divine indwelling and permeating—"preached by Eckhart and his school was followed," he says, "by the Nature Mysticism of Paracelsus," who is familiar to many of us through Browning's poem. Mr. Inge gives so clear and interesting a résumé of what the Nature Mystics thought and taught, that I will transcribe it wholesale.

Christian Mysticism

Paracelsus

“Through all phenomena, it was believed, runs an intricate network of sympathies and antipathies, the threads of which, could they be disentangled, would furnish us with a clue through all the labyrinths of natural and supernatural science. . . . We find (at this time), especially in Germany, an extraordinary outburst of Nature Mysticism—astrology, white magic, alchemy, necromancy and what not—such as Christianity had not witnessed before. These pseudo-sciences (with which was mingled much real progress in medicine, natural history and kindred sciences) were divided into three provinces—of the Spiritual World, which were mainly magical invocations, diagrams and signs ; of the Celestial World, which were taught by Astrology ; and of the Elemental World, which consisted in the sympathetic influence of material objects upon each other. These secrets (it was held) are all discoverable by man ; for man is a microcosm, or epitome of the Universe, and there is nothing in it to which he cannot claim an affinity. In knowing himself he knows both God, and all the other works that God has made."

Christian Mysticism

A greater Nature Mystic than Paracelsus was Jacob Jacob Böhme. Böhme, or Behmen, the wonderful shoemaker of Görlitz, who was born

Jacob Bohme

in 1575. He was a guide of men and leader of thought even during his lifetime, and under his native conditions. There is not time to speak of his theory or the "Eternal Nature," and the "Seven Fountain Spirits," and I will merely quote two independent and beautiful thoughts of his, and pass on. He says : "The world is like some fruit, such as a plum or an apple, and has its rind-men, its pulp-men and its core- or kernel-men ; all with the same faculties, only the first live merely on the surface of things, the last perceive how the outer form is determined by the central life within" ; and : "The true Philosopher's Stone is the new life in Christ Jesus. Only by victory over Self could any win victory over nature. To the selfish and the godless no secrets would be revealed. Such men were continually within reach of wonders they might not grasp" (Vaughan). Böhme's works were well known to his ardent dis-

Christian Mysticism

Law and English Mystics. ciple and exponent, William Law, one of the great English

Mystics. With these it is impossible to deal adequately ; but, as their works are more or less accessible to all, it must suffice to pass their names in brief review. The poems of Francis Quarles, George Herbert and Henry Vaughan are well known ; the sermons and discourses by John Smith, Henry More, Whichcote and others — the Cambridge Platonists—should be equally familiar. A new edition of a mystical work, The Revelations of Divine Love, by a nun, the Lady Julian of Norwich, is, I understand, now in the press. Many of these writers belong to what are called the Devotional Mystics, our third class, whom we must now consider, beginning with the great German group of the fourteenth century.

Tauler

In this group the most commanding and the most attractive figure is that of Tauler. Tauler, the Dominican monk of Strasburg. The sweetness and naïveté of the story of his "conversion" cannot be given except in the contemporaneous account, in whose genuineness there seems good reason to believe. This is the bare outline : Tauler had already achieved honour and reputation as a preacher in Strasburg, and was living a blameless life, when one day there came to the place an unknown layman (afterwards found to be Nicholas of Basle, one of the greatest of the "Gottesfreunde"), who, after hearing him preach several times, and receiving his priestly ministrations, was moved to tell him that he was "suffering himself to be killed by the letter," and was yet in the night of darkness, nor had yet tasted the sweetness of the Holy Ghost. Then said the master: "Dear son, I would have thee to know that, old as I am, I have never been spoken to in such fashion all my life." But after this very natural outbreak Tauler was so worked upon by the layman's words, that he gave himself up to follow his counsels entirely. These were hard indeed. "You must," said he, "take up your cross and follow our Lord Jesus Christ and His example in utter sincerity, humility and patience, and must let go all your proud ingenious reason, which you have through your learning in the Scripture. You shall, for a time, neither study nor preach, and you shall demean yourself with great simplicity towards your penitents : . . . you shall enter into your cell, and read your Hours, and also chant in the choir if you feel inclined, and shall say Mass every day. And what time is left, you shall set before you the sufferings of our Lord, and contemplate your own life in the mirror of His ; and meditate on your wasted time in which you have been living to yourself, and how small has been your love compared to His love . . . And it is my belief that one bitter drop which God will pour out for you will be that your good works and all your refraining from evil, yea, your whole life will be despised and turned to nought in the eyes of the people ; and all your spiritual children will forsake you, and think you are gone out of your mind ; and all your good friends and your brethren in the Convent will be offended at your life, and say that you have taken to strange ways." All of which came to pass. Tauler, at nearly fifty years old, set himself to this absolute abasement and self-surrender, and for nearly two years humbly strove that the Divine life might be brought forth in him. At the end of that time, Nicholas advised him to preach, and it was given out that he would do so on a certain day. He ascended the pulpit, but, choked with tears, could not deliver his discourse. "So the people departed, and this tale was spread abroad, so that he became a public laughing stock, despised by all ; and all the people said : Now we all see that he has become a downright fool. And his own brethren strictly forbade him to preach any more because he did the Convent great injury thereby, and disgraced the Order with the senseless practices that he had taken up, and which had disordered his brain." Nicholas, however, encouraged him, and bade him not despair, but at the end or five days to ask permission to preach to the brethren. "Such great and profound instruction," they then admitted, "with high and Divine wisdom, we have not heard for a long time." After this he was allowed to preach again, this time with marked and wonderful success; and the account goes on to say that "the Master made progress in the Divine life, and received such wisdom by the grace of the Holy Spirit, that he . . . came to be held in such esteem and honour throughout the land, and also in that city, that whenever the people had any weighty matter—spiritual or temporal—to transact, he was called in to settle it,

Christian Mysticism

Tauler

Christian Mysticism

Tauler

Christian Mysticism

Tauler

Christian Mysticism

and whatever he counselled them was right in their eyes to the end of his life." The humility of this biography (which he himself overlooked) does not see fitting to mention that, when the Black Death raged in Strasburg, Tauler worked night and day among the plague-stricken people, daring to disregard the Interdict, which would have deprived them of every form of spiritual comfort. Some of Tauler's sermons are translated, and are full of a tenderness and simplicity beyond words. "He who is too full of his own joys and sorrows to get beyond himself can never come to know himself. . . . Is it not a pitiful thing that a religious man should spend his whole industry and sole effort, and have his thoughts turned day and night upon his own little doings, and should be so full of them that he can hardly properly hold converse with GOD and with his own heart ! . . . If a man, while devoutly engaged in prayer, were called by some duty in the Providence of GOD to cease therefrom and cook a broth for some sick person, or any other such service, he should do so willingly and with great joy . . . believing not only that GOD would be with him, but that He would vouchsafe him, it may be, even greater grace and blessing in that external work, undertaken out of true love, in the service of his neighbour, than he should perhaps receive in the loftiest contemplation." Once more : " Oh, how often does man give himself up in will to God, and take himself back again as quickly, and fall away from God ! But now begin again, and give thyself to Him afresh, and yield thyself captive to the Divine Will in rightful allegiance, and trust thyself to the power of thy Father. . . . Trust Him wholly, and seek His righteousness. For therein is His righteousness shown, that He abideth ever with those who heartily seek Him, and make Him their end, and give themselves up to Him. In such He reigns, and all vain care falls away of itself in those who thus keep close to GOD in true self-surrender."

Tauler

Christian Mysticism

Tauler

"Self-surrender"—this is the supreme mystery of the Christian Mystic, "that which is everywhere proclaimed but not understood save by a right judgement." This is why he takes for his keystone, and pivot, and unshakeable rock the saying of Christ : "Whosoever will save his life shall lose it : but whosoever will lose his life for My sake, the same shall find it." It is the manner of their acceptance of this, that makes the Mystics a flock within the Christian herd. Plenty of Christianity is preached and practised in which it takes a more or less prominent, but still an incidental place. For the Mystic, it is his Alpha and his Omega. It is the theme of the divine descant of the Theologia Germanica, and the Theologia Germanica Imitation of Christ.

Christian Mysticism

The unknown "priest and warden of the Teutonic Order in Frankfurt," who wrote the Theologia Germanica about the year 1350, saw clearly that the higher life, the union with God, the Divine indwelling of all Mysticism, can invade and occupy the soul of man only so far as the usurper, self, gives way. Others have said what comes to the same thing, both before and after ; but few have conveyed into it that austere manliness, that counting the cost, but knowing it will be nothing to be accounted of, if indeed he may win Christ, which make of the Theologia Germanica a mystical hand-book of almost equal value with—some even place it before—the Imitation. This is its teaching : “ The more the Self, the I, the Me, the Mine, that is, self-seeking and selfishness, abate in a man, the more doth God’s I, that is God Himself, increase in him. . . . So long as a man . . . doeth anything, or frameth a purpose for the sake of his own likings, or desires, or opinions, or ends, he cometh not unto the life of Christ : . . . When we say that we ought to resign and forsake all things, this is not to be taken in the sense that a man is neither to do nor to purpose anything ; for a man must always have something to do and to order, so long as he liveth . . . but . . . so long as a man seeketh his own will and his own highest good, because it is his, and for his own sake, he will never find it. For a man's highest good . . . is that he should not seek himself, nor his own things, nor be his own end in any respect, either in things spiritual or things natural, but . . . only the praise and glory of God, and His holy will. . . .

Theologia Germanica

Christian Mysticism

Thomas à Kempis

And where there is this union . . . there is no spiritual pride nor irreverent spirit ; but boundless humility, and a lowly broken heart." And this

Thomas à Kempis says Thomas à Kempis also : " From this vice, the hidden inordinate love of self, springs almost all that must be utterly rooted out. . . . But because few labour to be perfectly dead to themselves or wholly go forth from themselves, they remain enmeshed in self, nor can they be lifted up in spirit above themselves." The Imitation is so much in the hands of all, that further quotation from it is needless. The two other Mystics of this fourteenth century

Christian Mysticism

Ruysbroek group are Ruysbroek and Suso. Ruysbroek, a Belgian monk, retired in old age to the monastery of Gr nthal, whither many persons resorted, desirous of obtaining his direction in spiritual matters. He dwells specially on the necessity for the firm intention, the conscious striving. "Ye are as holy as ye truly will to be holy," he said to two ecclesiastics who came to him for instruction.

Suso Suso was an ascetic and a visionary ; his writings are deeply poetical and are interspersed with accounts of visions and ecstasies vouchsafed to him, in one of which he beheld "the blessed master Eckhart, who counselled him to absolute detachment from the world ; the way to attain this," he said, "is to die to self and to maintain unruffled patience with all men." We find in Ruysbroek and Suso the Dionysian doctrine of the Divine Dark ; "the soul," says Suso, "becomes ignorant of itself and of all things : it hovers, reduced to its essence, in the abyss of the Trinity."

Suso

This is akin to much of the language used by the large class of Spanish Mystics. The Inquisition did its best to stamp out Mysticism in Spain, and condemned the writings of most of the men whom we have been considering. St. John of the

Christian Mysticism

St. John of the Cross and St. Theresa
the Cross, were essentially Mys-St. Theresa tics of action, and worked a wonderful reform in the fervour and self-abnegation of the religious orders of their time ; and both showed a like zeal and skill in organizing communities of men and women who should revive the poverty and simplicity of primitive Christianity. Their unremitting activity was not for a moment incompatible with their belief that the highest state of the Christian soul is spiritual night, passivity ; and through them
and their successor, Molinos Michael de Molinos, was preached (though it did not

Mme. Guyon, Fénelon

originate with them) the doctrine called Quietism. This is variously modified by the various types of character that have been drawn to it. Molinos taught two ways to the knowledge of God—meditation and contemplation, passive rather than active contemplation being the highest state attainable. Readers of John Inglesant will remember the account there given of Molinos and the Quietist controversy.

A modification of Mme. Guyon, Fénelon, Quietism was also the cause of conflict between Fénelon and Mme. Guyon on the one side, and Bossuet and other high officials of the Church on the other. The Life of Mme. Guyon, by Upham, will be read and re-read by all who love to dwell on the highest types of Devotional Mysticism. Her teachings and those of Fénelon are practical, lofty, inspiring, and second to none for the lift and insight which they afford. They are not quoted from here, as in the main they repeat what we have already drawn from various sources, though they have a directness and beauty of expression all their own.

Christian Mysticism

Before summing up
Modern the principal features Mysticism of Mysticism, its errors and safeguards, a few words must be said on modern

Modern Mysticism

Mysticism. It does not need much telling for us to be aware that Nature Mysticism contains most of the formulae which are returning to us in a certain phase of modern thought. In its highest aspiration, which I take to be to establish the influence of the spiritual in, through, and upon the things of sense, it can do nothing but good. But its aspirations, or those of its exponents, are not always upon this level ; and some of the levels are very much lower. Nothing testifies so clearly to the limitations of a tight-shut little mind as to say, of any well-attested statement of whatever kind, I refuse to believe it. That things bad and good, sug-

Christian Mysticism

gestive and purposeless, and altogether beyond everyday experience do happen, are matters which, if alleged upon trustworthy evidence, no thinking being has the right to deny. It would be equally inept to assert that because they may be called manifestations of the supernatural, therefore they are all of good. Some of them may be, we hope. But "the rulers of the darkness of this world" are certainly very active, and probably very pervasive, and extremely powerful. Any attempt, though it may be quite a legitimate one, to force ourselves into secret matters must be guarded by a lofty, definite, and pure intention. This modern Nature Mysticism may perhaps be described as a theurgic Theism ; and the old dangers are always turning up with the old faces for those who will recognize them. Pantheism, as we have said, is far from obsolete. A great deal of modern Mysticism rejects the supremacy of the Christian revelation ; and so long as writers of such great beauty as Maeterlinck and a host of others, elevating and suggestive, ignore that the highest mystical life must be hid with Christ in God, so long must we believe them to have apprehended in part only.

Maeterlinck

III

Summary

(a) FEATURES

FOR above all the lofty figures whom the Mystic can summon to his support stand two, higher even than the rest, and there is no going behind their teaching. These are St. Paul and St. John, and to these, standing firmly on the supreme mystical paradox of Christ Himself, we can make final and conclusive appeal. "The Gospel of St. John is

Self-surrender

the charter of Christian Mysticism," says Mr. Inge ; and certainly the Epistles of St. Paul contain its code. Dying to live

— the paradox of

1. Self-surrender Christ — self-surrender, is a thought that lies at the heart of his whole conception of spiritual life. What is more truly Pauline and more truly mystical than this passage : "Always bearing about in the body the dying of the Lord Jesus, that the life also of Jesus might be made manifest in our body. For we which live are alway delivered unto death for Jesus' sake, that the life also of Jesus might be made manifest in our mortal flesh."

Christian Mysticism

Another mystical
2. Christ's idea which Mr. Inge Life in us says "is never absent from the mind of St. Paul is, that the individual Christian must live through and experience personally the redemptive process of Christ.
The life, death, and resurrection of Christ were for him the revelation of a law, the law of redemption through suffering. The victory over sin and death was won for us, but it must also be won in us." A beautiful illustration of this thought is found in one of the old hymns in the Lyra
Germanica—

What profits it that Christ is born,
And bringeth childhood back to men ;
Unless our long-lost right we mourn,
And win through penitence again,

The Three Stages

And lead a God-like life on earth
As children of the second birth ? . . .

What profit ye His death and cross
Unless to self ye also die ?
Ye love your life, to find it loss,
Afraid the flesh to crucify.
Wouldst live to this world still ? Then know
His death to thee is barren show. . . .

What profits it that He is risen,
If dead in sins thou yet dost lie ?
If yet thou cleavest to thy prison,
What profit that He dwells on high ?
His triumph will avail thee nought,
If thou hast ne'er the battle fought.

The division of the
3. The Three Stages spiritual life into three stages, purifying, illuminating, and united, or rather uniting, with GOD, of which we have spoken earlier, has been made by Mystics in every age ; and subdivided according to their various methods of thought and temperament.

Christian Mysticism

Symbolism, allegory, hidden meanings are found by Mystics in all departments of life. Since it is part of their creed to believe in a unity of all things, it is natural they should trace, and rightly trace, the interdependence of the material and the spiritual. A true symbolism is delightfully distinguished by Mr. Inge from its perversion, which too frequently passes current for the real thing: "The symbolic value of natural objects is not that they remind us of something which they are not; but that they help us to understand something that they in part are."

Reality of the Ideal

And another mystical idea of the greatest practical value is, that it is the Ideal only which is the Real. I know nowhere a more exalted description of how to pluck out the inner heart of things than is given by the old Wiltshire clergyman in that exquisite mystical romance, John Inglesant. He says: "It seems to me more and more, that the soul and spirit of every man in passing through life among familiar things is among supernatural things always. . . . If you can receive this mystery, and go through the path of life which lies before you, looking upon yourself as an immortal spirit walking among supernatural things—for the natural things of this life would be nothing were they not moved and animated by the efficacy of that which is above nature—I think you may find this doctrine a light which will guide your feet in dark places ; and it would seem, unless I am mistaken, that this habit of mind is very likely to lead to the blessedness of the Beatific Vision of God.” This is a radiance and a watchword for those inevitable moments when we seem shut away from God’s hand, and the wheels of life drive their heaviest.

Christian Mysticism

6. Visions      Little has been said about Visions and

Visions

Ecstasies, for we have been seeking to dwell upon the essentials rather than on the extravagances of Mysticism ; and although, doubtless, they have been granted to many, and the modern Roman Church looks upon them as the very sign-manual of a mystic, may it not be that their connexion with Mysticism is incidental and not integral ? And that the temperament to which Mysticism is congenial is the temperament on which the faculty of seeing visions is often, but certainly not always, bestowed ?

(b) TENDENCIES TO ERROR

As regards the errors
1 & 2. See pp. 34 & 36 that are charged

Christian Mysticism

against Mysticism, I have spoken of two, and there are three others, perhaps more liable to beset the path of the ordinary wayfarer. These are : a disparagement of the forms of religion ; a “striving to wind oneself too high for mortal man” ; and individualism. They have one and all been discountenanced by at least as many Mystics as have fallen into them.

3. Dispar-      The great revivals agement of of Mysticism can in forms      more than one instance be traced to attempts having been made to limit the operation of the Spirit to ordinances prescribed by authority.
When this has been the case, a

Disparagement

revolt has naturally carried men's minds too far in the opposite direction, and Mysticism has undertaken "the vengeance of a suppressed truth." There is no denying that it has frequently allied itself with the spirit of independence, and the desire to escape the paralysing tendency of empty custom. Mr. Dill, in his book on Roman Society about the fourth century, speaks of this desire as manifesting itself in Pagan circles in Rome, where the Paganism which was really living and stirred souls was not, he says, that of the Roman or Greek religions, but that of Eastern mystical thought. The Oriental mysteries "raised the worshipper

Christian Mysticism

above the level of cold, conventional conformity, and satisfied, in some way, the longing for communion with the Deity." This spirit and that of independence were at work in the German mystics who preceded the Reformation : the Quietists were hunted down as deadly foes of the Church in Spain, Italy and France. But Mysticism never sets itself against authority as such. And whatever is traditional or symbolic in worship will naturally appeal to the Mystic's sense of the unity of all things ; and emphasizes his position as a part of the whole.

That Mystics aim
4. Undue exaltation too high is a charge which many of us can

Individualism

bring with a comfortable sense of security against its recoiling on our own heads. The command however is universal : Be ye perfect. The Mystics at least try ; and I do not know that they are more tempted than other strugglers to blur the distinction between endeavour and achievement.

Lastly : the danger
5. Individualism : and of individualism.
its two safe- There we must take guards breath and think.

What room is there in the Mystic's scheme of life for others ? How can he serve them better by being a mystic than if he were not one ? If he cannot do this, he may as well leave off at once, for he is on a wrong tack. But he can, he most certainly can; and in two ways.

Christian Mysticism

The first is by
I. Prayer
and Thought Prayer and Thought.

Of Prayer it is not necessary here to speak. But the use of Thought as an agency comes to us along the lines of modern Mysticism, and needs a little explaining. It has been written somewhere that our thoughts about people help to create an atmosphere around them. Mr. Clifford Harrison, in his book called Notes on the Margins, writes more than one passage to the same effect. He says: "If waves of force pass through earth and rock; if certain

Prayer and Thought

forms of light pass through our bodies and substances which we call solid; and if the electric force can be transmitted with certain direction and intelligent application of use, without the clumsy apparatus and medium of wires, it may well be that psychic and mental force can be and is transmitted and exercised in a hundred unknown and mysterious, but absolutely natural ways in the unrecognized ether of thought." Again, "It seems a curious and dismembered argument which allows that physical forces of all kinds issue and radiate from our earth in all directions through space, but that the greatest force the earth knows

Christian Mysticism

—the will and spirit of Man, the force in fact, to which the whole creation and evolution of the earth appear to have led, has no issue and no radiation.” And once more : “Our physical world and atmosphere are filled and penetrated . . . with forces which have voyaged from the sun, and those distant suns, the stars. Our thought - atmosphere, and the world of human life may be, à fortiori, filled and penetrated with mental and spiritual influences.” Here we may see how that to believe in the Ideal as the only Reality may be turned to daily, momentary and incalculable service to those whom we desire to serve. “We are what we are trying to become," we have been taught. If, as we are bound to believe, this is true of each of us, we must remember it is no less true of each other of us. The love that on its negative side "thinketh no evil," on its positive side is active "in believing all things" for good. To think truly of our friends, we must think the best of them ; by thinking the best of them, we make the best of them. This is expressed very characteristically by Maeterlinck when he says : " You are more truly that which you are in the eyes of the woman who loves you, than that which in your soul you believe yourself to be." If we keep our thoughts from disloyalty, there will be fewer words and acts of disloyalty, and going further than this, we may believe that while by allowing thoughts of bitterness, contempt and hostility (even if deserved) we are doing devil's work upon others, by thinking gentle, faithful and ennobling thoughts about them, we shall wrap an atmosphere around their souls in which gentleness, faithfulness and nobleness will assuredly flourish.

Prayer and Thought

Christian Mysticism

II. Purification for Service. The other way is shown forth in a sermon by Canon Holland. All the self-surrender, the purgative, the illuminative, the contemplative way are good for us, are indeed the best for us, but only in so far as they are not made an end in themselves. He is speaking of the symbol of salt : "Salt is good" : it is clean and clear and separate, and is no good as salt if it is not all these things. But salt in itself and for itself is as undesirable—if not actually as vapid, as the white of an egg : "it is good—not for any purpose of its own but for use . . . it exists solely to keep from corruption, not itself, but that which needs its services. . . . Let those who criticize the necessity for self-discipline and self-purification look out over the wide world which is to be won to God . . . Not for pride,

Purification for Service

Christian Mysticism

not for self-pleasing, not for selfish comfort, but simply in order that we may love all sinners more and serve them better are we called upon to . . . purify ourselves as He is pure . . . For their sakes I sanctify Myself, He said." There never was a more complete vindication of the Mystic and of his toilsome self-stripping. Of the service that inheres in the fullest union—service that is, we might almost say, involuntary, being essential, integral to the united state of the believer with Christ, which must be the aim of every true Mystic, the following comment on this very sermon we have been considering, gives a glimpse, under a chemical analogy, suggested by the symbol of salt : "As all natural substances, in their complete being, have a definite crystalline form, and volatilize, given the requisite heat . . . so union with Christ is the mystical crystallization," and "when this is attained the purified soul is in a state" in which the fire of love sets free its hidden qualities to diffuse and penetrate spontaneously. By this diffusion, this setting free, we are transmuted into powers of service beyond our knowledge. In purification for serving, then, and in this further ministration through union, we surely rescue the Mystic from the charge of self-concentration and absorption in his individual salvation : and show that by scaling the mystical ladder, the highest ideal of loving unwavering service is attained.

Purification for Service

Christian Mysticism

We may fitly end with the closing words of the Theologia Germanica : "That we may thus deny ourselves and forsake and renounce all things for God's sake, and give up our own wills, and die unto ourselves, and live unto GOD alone, and to His will, may He help us Who gave up His will to His Heavenly Father—Jesus Christ, our Lord, to Whom be blessing for ever and ever."

---

H. R. Allenson, 2, Ivy Lane, E.C.

